In his second week on the witness stand, a former Sierra Leonean rebel leader convicted of mass crimes during Sierra Leone's brutal 11-year conflict pointed away from Mr. Taylor when speaking about support provided to his forces by outsiders. This week, the witness said that the Ivorian government helped his rebel group much more than the former Liberian president in terms of housing for his troops, and that West African leaders - not Mr. Taylor acting unilaterally -- decided to remove one of his rebel colleagues from Sierra Leone when he became a hindrance to the country's peace process.
